BSIP study of India's active mud volcano to decode climate shifts

More insights may come about India's only active mud volcano at Baratang Island in the Andaman and Nicobar Islands. A team of scientists from the Birbal Sahnii Institute of Palaeosciences (BSIP), Lucknow, has begun studying of the volcano, along with dormant mud volcanoes at Diglipur in Andaman to understand past climate shifts and natural greenhouse gas emissions.

The team leader and senior scientist Shilpa Pandey recently completed a field survey of the sites and documented active mud flows, methane seepage and layered sediment deposits. Researchers say these features could preserve evidence of earlier eruptions, seismic events and environmental change over long periods.

Unlike conventional volcanoes, mud volcanoes do not spew molten lava. Instead, they release cool mud, water and gases - mainly methane and carbon dioxide - from deep underground. That's why they are considered valuable natural systems for studying tectonic activity, methane migration and subsurface geological processes. Pandey said volcano has remained active for millions of years and its deposits may help reconstruct how natural gas emissions behaved during the initial phases of global warming and cooling.

The team selected these sites because they provide access to subsurface materials and fluids which are otherwise difficult to investigate directly.

"The study will focus on two principal lines of investigation. First, it will involve geochemical characterization of gases associated with the mud volcanoes to understand their origin and subsurface processes. Second, it will examine sedimentary deposits accumulated over time, using them as proxies for reconstructing past environmental conditions and climate variability," Pandey said.

These rare and dynamic geological formations are invaluable natural assets that must be protected as geohazard sites, owing to their immense scientific importance, educational relevance, and cultural significance, she added.

Pandey said these systems are important for understanding how methane release and carbon cycling influence climate processes. Their sediments, she said, also preserve signatures of past environmental and tectonic changes and may indicate hydrocarbon systems beneath the surface.

BSIP Director, Prof MG Thakkar said the institute plans to expand the work through advanced sedimentological, geochemical and isotopic studies, along with multiproxy palaeoenvironmental reconstruction. He said the

ANIIDCO launches AIDFP & Internship Prog. to strengthen professional capacity

Sri Vijaya Puram Apr. 2 Andaman and Nicobar Islands Integrated Development Corporation (ANIIDCO) has launched the ANIIDCO Island Development Fellowship Programme (AIDFP) and Internship Programme to strengthen professional capacity and promote sustainable, context-sensitive development across the Andaman & Nicobar Islands. As the Corporation implements key initiatives in eco-tourism, infrastructure, marine and coastal planning, environmental sustainability, and urban development, the programmes aim to bring in young professionals and domain experts to contribute structured technical, analytical, and creative inputs aligned with the unique ecological and geographical character of the islands.

The Fellowship Programme will engage four qualified professionals for a period of nine months (extendable up to twelve months), while the Internship Programme will provide short-term exposure to ten students and recent graduates in relevant disciplines. Designed as non-employment, outcome-oriented engagements, the initiatives emphasize innovation, sustainability, research, documentation, and institutional knowledge creation. Through these programmes, ANIIDCO seeks to build a future-ready talent pool and generate high-quality outputs that support long-term island development planning. The detailed notice, application format and Google Form link can be downloaded from the vacancy link of website <https://andamannicobar.gov.in>, <https://aniidco.and.nic.in> & Google Link: <https://forms.gle/mGgINZTRtXKSQWQ7>, a press release from ANIIDCO said.

competitive business environment.

The 5-day bootcamp will be conducted in three phases across 30 locations nationwide, ensuring wide outreach and regional diversity:

- > Phase I: 6th-10th April, 2026 at 13 locations
- > Phase II: 20th-24th April, 2026 at 13 locations
- > Phase III: 11th-15th May, 2026 at 4 locations

The program is expected to witness participation from approximately 6,500 students, primarily comprising teams from higher education institutions including Smart India Hackathon (SIH) participants and winners, Institution's Innovation Council (IIC) institutions, and students with innovative ideas or prototypes requiring design improvement, ergonomic enhancement, and guidance for investment-ready pitching. Faculty mentors will accompany and guide the student teams throughout the bootcamp.

Importantly, the bootcamp locations span across Jammu & Kashmir and North Eastern states, ensuring inclusive participation from geographically diverse regions including Tier-II, Tier III cities. For the first time, the IDE Bootcamp is being organized in Leh (Ladakh) and Andaman & Nicobar Islands, marking a significant step towards expanding innovation outreach to remote and strategically important regions. Dr. B R Ambedkar Institute of Technology has been selected as the host institute in Andaman & Nicobar Islands scheduled from 6th-10th April 2026.

The theme of the program reflects the belief that Design Can Be the Greatest Change Agent for Development. The IDE Bootcamp was initially launched in 2023 by the Hon'ble Minister of Education, Shri Dharmendra Pradhan, Since then, the program has been successfully conducted across the country with significant impact.

Focused on fostering creativity, innovation, and entrepreneurial thinking, the Bootcamp encourages students and faculty to explore new approaches to problem-solving. Through exposure to real-world challenges, hands-on activities, and collaborative learning, participants are prepared to confidently navigate the complexities of the innovation and startup ecosystem.

The Wadhvani Foundation is the Knowledge Partner for the program, providing expert master trainers, while the SBI Foundation is supporting the initiative as the Organization Partner. The bootcamp includes expert sessions by startup founders, incubation leaders, and domain experts, who will also serve on the jury panel during the final pitching session on Day 5. Participating teams will present their refined ideas, and the top 5 teams at each location will be recognized with appreciation certificates and non-monetary awards.

The program will be centrally inaugurated on 6th April 2026 by Prof. Yogesh Singh, Chairman, AICTE, in the presence of Dr. Shyama Rath, Member Secretary, AICTE, through a virtual ceremony from AICTE Headquarters, New Delhi, a press release from DBRAIT said.
