Port Blair, July 12
 With a view to create interactive zones and a 'Chowpal' feel amongst society/community small parks, the Port Blair Municipal Council (PBMC) has proposed to create small parks in the neighbourhood. These parks will be designed with urban forms to reflect the composite culture of the city. The outcome would be more green spaces and openness to inculcate the habit of personal conversation leading to social interactions.

The three seafront sites along the South Point to Corbyn's Cove road once completed will be a delightful sight for people to spend their leisure besides the seaside view. These stretches will also attract more tourists and local populace as well. The recently created Flag Point at South Point attracts more visitors and to create more such spots and decongest the city, these three sites along the Eastern Coast (South Point- Corbyn's Cove) is being developed, a press release from PBMC said.
