India's 'unsinkable carrier' near South-east Asia

The closure of the Strait of Hormuz taught India what strategic exposure costs. Now it's making its move not too far from the Malacca Strait.

Located 40 nautical miles from the Malacca Strait choke point, the International Container Transhipment Port at Great Nicobar's Galathea Bay is the centrepiece of New Delhi's next grand plan - the Great Nicobar Project.

It is pitched potentially as a "pivotal hub in global shipping by drawing cargo from major ports across the region while reducing logistics costs, improving maritime security and strengthening India's role in global trade".

The US$10 billion ($S12.8 billion) project sits at India's southern extremity, on an island in the Andaman and Nicobar archipelago roughly 1,400 km from the Indian mainland and just north of Sumatra. It's described as "turning geography into strength", combining a logistics build-out with maritime security. A retired Indian Admiral refers to the project as an "unsinkable aircraft carrier on permanent station".

It's a telling sign that India is doubling down on strategic capabilities and infrastructure in this part of the world. Behind such an ambitious move lies an immediate calculation.

New Delhi was caught unawares by the closure of the Strait of Hormuz to its west. Now, as it deals with the debilitating impact of the Iran war on its economy, it is determined to ensure that something similar does not take place to its east.

Strategic waters

The rationale was laid out in a government press note issued on May 1.

"India's ports lack deep water berths for large ships," it said, noting the 20m natural water depth in Galathea Bay. "Because of this, cargo is routed through Colombo and Singapore. India loses substantial revenue as a result. Countries like Myanmar, China and Sri Lanka are already building deep water facilities to capture this trade."

Workers unloading shipping containers from the Nalanda passenger vessel at Kamorta in India's Andaman and Nicobar Islands on March 25.

The Hormuz blockade, on account of which India is suffering energy shortages and mounting pump and cooking gas prices, has reminded New Delhi how vulnerable global trade is to maritime choke points - and why being in a position to influence the Strait of Malacca, considered the world's largest maritime choke point by trade volume, is important not only for its own security, but for regional influence.

Aside from the trans-shipment terminal on Galathea Bay which is slated to have a capacity of 14.2 million TEUs (20-foot equivalent units), or about a third of the container volume Singapore handled in 2025, the project will have a greenfield international airport built to handle 4,000 peak-hour passengers, and a city built on more than 160 sq km of land - or slightly larger than the north region of Singapore.

While the airport in the administrative capital of Sri Vijaya Puram currently handles approximately 1.8 million passengers annually, the new airport is expected to handle at least one million passengers when it opens and "grow to approximately 10 million passengers per year thereafter."

Military presence

New Delhi has responded by building a string of military facilities up and down the Andaman chain of islands. For instance, Great Nicobar's Campbell Bay already hosts INS Baaz, a naval air station that overlooks the Strait of Malacca and the Six Degree Channel, a key passage between the Indian Ocean and Pacific Ocean.

Aside from unmanned aerial vehicles, the Indian navy has positioned the advanced P-8i maritime patrol aircraft on Baaz. Next-door Car Nicobar hosts a major air force base where advanced Sukhois and C-130 transporters have been frequently spotted operating into. Now, the Modi Government is turning to fix things on the logistics side.

India's existing trans-shipment points - Mundra in Gujarat, and Vallarpadam and Vizhinjam in Kerala - are all on the Arabian Sea-facing western coastline and the east coast could use some help. Along that coast after all is India's fastest-growing province, Tamil Nadu, which is clocking double-digit economic expansion and has emerged as a production centre for global companies such as Apple and Hyundai. So too on the east coast is Odisha, which is another fast-developing state. (Source: The article has been written by Ravi Velloor, a senior columnist at The Straits Times)

HVADA implementing 'Protected cultivation' Scheme under NHM to promote high-value horticulture in the Islands

Farmers urged to avail benefit under the scheme

Sri Vijaya Puram, June 16

The High Value Agriculture Development Agency (HVADA) is implementing the Scheme "Protected Cultivation" under the National Horticulture Mission (NHM) of the Mission for Integrated Development of Horticulture (MIDH) during 2026-27 to promote climate-resilient and high-value horticulture in the Andaman & Nicobar Islands.

Protected cultivation technologies such as Naturally Ventilated Poly houses, Shade net houses and weed mats help farmers overcome adverse weather conditions, improve water-use efficiency and increase productivity. These structures are particularly beneficial for cultivating off-season vegetables, raising quality nurseries, and growing high-value flower crops.

Under the project, financial assistance will be provided to eligible farmers for establishing protected cultivation structures. Assistance will be available for Naturally ventilated poly houses, bamboo/cable purlin poly houses, shade net houses, and weed mats.

As per MIDH guidelines, eligible farmers can avail 50% subsidy assistance for establishing protected cultivation structures as per MIDH norms.

District Administration, SA reclaims 7000 sq. mts. Government land from encroachers

Sri Vijaya Puram, June 16

The District Administration, South Andaman, in its sustained efforts to safeguard public assets and ensure the lawful utilization of Government land, has intensified its drive against unauthorized occupations and illegal encroachments across the district. As part of this ongoing initiative, strict surveillance and regular monitoring are being undertaken to identify and remove encroachments, thereby restoring valuable public land for community use and future developmental purposes.

A major eviction drive was carried out today at Nayashar village. The Revenue officials with crucial support from the Police Department removed an under construction RCC structure unauthorisedly erected was demolished with the assistance of excavators.

The eviction team also removed several other forms of encroachments, including illegal land plotting activities. Approximately 50 cemented boundary pillars erected were dismantled during the operation. As a result of the drive, nearly 7,000 square metres of

World Day to combat Desertification and Drought to be observed today

Sri Vijaya Puram, June 16

The World Day to Combat Desertification and Drought is observed every year on 17th June to raise awareness about the importance of protecting land resources and addressing the challenges posed by land degradation, desertification and drought. The observance encourages Governments, institutions and communities to adopt sustainable land-use practices for ensuring environmental security and the well-being of future generations.

The theme for the year 2026, "Rangelands: Recognize. Respect. Restore.", emphasizes the vital role of rangelands and natural ecosystems in supporting biodiversity, regulating water cycles, sustaining livelihoods and strengthening resilience against climate change. Healthy landscapes are essential for food security, water conservation and ecological balance.

Land degradation and unsustainable use of natural resources can lead to loss of vegetation, soil erosion, reduced water availability, decline in biodiversity and increased vulnerability to climate-related disasters. Although the A&N Islands are blessed with rich forest cover and diverse ecosystems, it is
