Great conjunction of Jupiter & Saturn at sky over Port Blair today

Port Blair, Dec. 20

There will be a major celestial event as Planet duo Jupiter and Saturn will make a special appearance in the western sky just after sunset tomorrow (Dec. 21). Both planets will be just 0.1 degree apart from each other. It will be nearly impossible to tell, there is one planet or two giants next to each other. Such conjunctions of Jupiter & Saturn happened earlier in 1623 & 1683. We are fortunate to witness the 2020 event. The next closest will be sixty years later in 2080.

Interestingly, 21st December 2020 also marks the day of Winter Solstice. On this night, Sun is farthest in the Southern direction and exactly overhead of the tropic of Capricorn. From this day, "Uttarayan" or the northward motion of Sun starts. It is the longest night for the Northern Hemisphere. The day also marks the first quarter of Moon leading to the full Moon on 30th December.

The event will be visible in the sky over Port Blair. One can easily spot the very bright Jupiter over the Saturn in the western sky just after sunset between 5.30 pm and 6.30 pm (maximum visibility period), a press release from Science Center, Port Blair said.
