OPINION | Great Nicobar: India's Strategic Frontier in The Indian Ocean

India's decision to transform Great Nicobar Island into a major transshipment hub, military-logistics centre, and economic gateway is not merely another infrastructure project. It is a declaration of intent. In an era where maritime power increasingly determines geopolitical influence, the Great Nicobar project represents one of the most ambitious strategic moves undertaken by India since independence.

As former Brigadier Sanjay Iyer rightly observed, the project gives India "a persistent presence in the eastern Indian Ocean rather than the occasional visit." That statement captures the essence of the initiative. For decades, India has geographically occupied a commanding position in the Indian Ocean but has failed to fully leverage it strategically. Great Nicobar could finally change that equation.

Located near the Malacca Strait, one of the busiest and most critical maritime chokepoints in the world, the island sits at the crossroads of global trade routes connecting the Pacific and Indian Oceans.

Nearly one-third of global shipping traffic passes through this corridor. Any nation with sustained logistical, surveillance, and naval capabilities in this region automatically acquires significant strategic leverage. China understands this. The United States understands this. India can no longer afford hesitation.

India's Maritime Shift in the Indo-Pacific

The Great Nicobar project is therefore not simply about ports and airports; it is about India's emergence as a decisive maritime power in the Indo-Pacific.

For years, India's strategic thinking remained overwhelmingly continental, shaped by land threats from Pakistan and China. Maritime affairs were often treated as secondary. Yet the 21st century has fundamentally altered global geopolitics. Economic power now flows through sea lanes, supply chains, energy corridors, and strategic ports. Nations that dominate maritime trade routes shape global commerce and diplomacy.

China recognised this transformation earlier than

The Great Nicobar Project could redefine India's maritime power, economic ambitions, and geopolitical future

India. Through the Belt and Road Initiative and the so-called "String of Pearls" strategy, Beijing has invested heavily in ports stretching from Gwadar in Pakistan to Hambantota in Sri Lanka and Kyaukpyu in Myanmar. These projects are not purely economic ventures; they are geopolitical assets designed to expand Chinese influence across the Indian Ocean Region.

India's response had long been reactive and fragmented. Great Nicobar signals a shift toward proactive strategic planning.

Economic and Commercial Importance of Great Nicobar

The proposed international container transshipment terminal is especially significant. Currently, a large portion of India's cargo is transshipped through foreign ports such as Singapore, Colombo, and Port Klang. This dependency weakens India's economic efficiency and strategic autonomy. A world-class transshipment port at Great Nicobar could reduce that dependence while positioning India as a regional maritime logistics hub.

The island's proximity to Southeast Asia also offers enormous commercial potential. As global supply chains diversify away from excessive dependence on China, India has an opportunity to integrate more deeply with Indo-Pacific trade networks. Great Nicobar could become a gateway linking India with ASEAN economies, East Asia, and Australia.

Strengthening India's Defence and Surveillance Capabilities

Equally important is the defence dimension. The Andaman and Nicobar Command is India's only tri-service military command, yet for years it suffered from inadequate infrastructure and limited operational reach. Expanding facilities in Great Nicobar would strengthen India's ability to monitor naval activity in the eastern Indian Ocean and the Malacca Strait. In an age of intensifying Chinese naval expansion, such capabilities are no longer optional.

China's growing presence in the Indian Ocean is a strategic reality. Chinese research vessels frequently enter the region. PLA Navy deployments have become increasingly common. Beijing's influence in Sri Lanka, Myanmar, Bangladesh, and the Maldives has expanded steadily over the last decade. India therefore needs permanent surveillance and rapid-response capabilities in the region.

Great Nicobar provides precisely that strategic depth. The proposed airport and supporting military infrastructure would allow faster deployment of naval and air assets. Enhanced radar and intelligence systems would improve maritime domain awareness. In crisis scenarios, the island could function as a forward operating base for India's eastern maritime theatre.

Redefining India's Indo-Pacific Vision

Another important dimension of the Great Nicobar initiative is its symbolism.

For decades, India's island territories remained psychologically and administratively distant from the mainland imagination. The Andaman and Nicobar Islands were often viewed primarily through the lens of tourism or colonial history. The

Safeguarding our legacy- Establishment of Andaman Nicobar Museum

Islanders urged to share antiques, manuscripts & memorabilia for preservation & display in the upcoming Museum

Sri Vijaya Puram, May 24

The Directorate of Arts & Culture, Andaman & Nicobar Administration is in the process of creating the 'Andaman Nicobar Museum' in the Old State Library Building, near Head Post Office, Sri Vijaya Puram. This institution is envisioned as a vital repository to preserve and showcase the Islands' rich cultural, historical, and social heritage, spanning from the primitive tribal eras to the colonial and post-Independence periods.

In order to enrich the museum's collection and ensure that it reflects the collective memory of the Islands, the A&N Administration appeals to the residents of the Andaman & Nicobar Islands to come forward and contribute their mite in establishing this Museum by donating antiques, old written documents, manuscripts, photographs, artefacts or memorabilia of historical and cultural significance available with them.

All contributions will be carefully examined for authenticity and relevance, and selected items will be preserved and prominently displayed in the museum. Due consideration and acknowledgment will be accorded to the donors, with their names featured alongside the exhibits, thereby honoring their role in safeguarding the heritage of the Islands.

This initiative is envisioned as a community-driven endeavor, ensuring that the legacy of Andaman & Nicobar

Islands is preserved for future generations.

Strengthening Solid Waste Management Systems through Technical Training on Baling Machines

Sri Vijaya Puram, May 24

ANET-Dakshin Foundation, in collaboration with the Directorate of RD, PRIs & ULBs and Dr. B.R. Ambedkar Institute of Technology (DBRAIT), Andaman and Nicobar Administration, conducted a two-day workshop on Baling Machine Operation and Maintenance for sanitation workers, machine operators, and local technicians from across South Andaman district on 20th and 21st May, 2026 at Panchayat Community Hall, Beodnabad.

While significant improvements have been made in solid waste management systems at the Gram Panchayat level particularly in terms of service coverage-the operation, maintenance, and repair of baling machines continue to remain a key bottleneck across the islands. Baling machines are a critical component of the solid waste management system, compressing recyclable waste collected by Gram Panchayats into compact blocks for transportation to the mainland for further recycling. Persistent operational and maintenance challenges, however, have created difficulties for Gram Panchayats in ensuring uninterrupted waste management services.

The workshop was organised to address this gap by building the technical capacity of sanitation workers and local technicians to improve the efficiency, functioning, and long-term maintenance of baling machines. Sessions were facilitated by Shri Ninad Kshirsagar and Shri Vinit Prakash Ahire

OPINION | Great Nicobar: India's .....

new project redefines them as central pillars of India's Indo-Pacific vision. This transformation aligns with India's broader geopolitical evolution. Under its Indo-Pacific strategy, India is increasingly deepening partnerships with countries such as Japan, Australia, France, and the United States. The Quad framework itself reflects the growing importance of maritime security in the region. Great Nicobar could become a strategic anchor supporting these partnerships.

Japan, in particular, has shown strong interest in Indo-Pacific infrastructure collaboration. As democratic nations seek alternatives to Chinese-controlled supply chains and maritime networks, India's strategic geography becomes increasingly valuable. Great Nicobar strengthens India's credibility as a serious Indo-Pacific actor rather than merely a regional power confined to South Asia.

Strategic Confidence and India's Maritime Future

There is also a psychological aspect to the project that should not be underestimated. Nations rise not only through economic growth but through strategic confidence. Large-scale infrastructure projects often reflect national ambition and geopolitical self-belief. The Great Nicobar initiative sends a message that India is willing to think beyond immediate electoral cycles and invest in long-term strategic capabilities.

If executed intelligently, Great Nicobar could become for India what Singapore became for Southeast Asia a critical maritime and logistics node with outsized strategic importance.

The Indian Ocean is rapidly becoming the centre of global geopolitics. Energy routes, trade flows, naval competition, and strategic rivalries increasingly converge in these waters. India sits naturally at the heart of this geography, but geography alone guarantees nothing. Strategic advantage must be built, defended, and sustained.

Great Nicobar offers India that opportunity.

If India succeeds, the island may one day be remembered as the place where the country truly embraced its maritime destiny. (Source: <https://news.abplive.com/>)
