The fading story of S S Inchkeith

timber from Port Meadows (South Andaman) and moved out full steam ahead but unfortunately hit an uncharted rock in the middle of Port Meadows and was grounded in the channel.

Quite a long time, her wheel house and masts were visible in the sea but with the passage of time nothing left on the surface. Now she rests at a depth of 14 metres near a coral reef providing shelter to thousands of fishes in the form of an artificial reef. Marine life in this wreck site is plenty which makes it popular choice for visiting divers.

S.S.Inchkeith had a long history and changed her name several times with change of ownership. First she was launched as SS BarbaraMarie on 15th Feb.1923 by Priestman & Co. in Southwick England and later renamed as SS Portsea till she was sold to an Italian shipping company. She was named S.S.Cipro and continued with this name from 1933 to 1937 in the Port of Naples (Italy) as her home port. Again she was sold to another Italian company and renamed as S.S.Stella. She served with this company from 1937 to 1941 till she fell victim to the second world war. She was captured by British warship HMS Circassia at Cape Verde Islands and taken to Bermuda ( a British overseas territory). She served as empire ship under the Ministry of War Transport, London bearing the name-S.S.Empire Planet till 1947.

Later she was sold to a Hong Kong based company and was plying in the Indian waters carrying coal and logs from one port to another. Now it is almost 62 years have passed and the story of S.S.Inchkeith has slowly faded away but she will live forever in the memories of local inhabitants. N.Mohan, Retd.Asst.Director of Fisheries.

Cellular Jail - the story rewind

Dr. Pronob Kumar Sircar

An old photograph of Cellular Jail

The Cellular Jail - once the prison built by the British rulers at Port Blair where countless martyrs of India's Independence struggle laid down their lives, is now a National Memorial. The jail is named 'Cellular Jail' because it comprises of single cells where the convicts were kept in darkness. They were not allowed to meet the other prisoners and had to face barbarian tortures of the British rulers. The National Memorial exhibits help us to realize and feel the agonies of the Indian freedom fighters severely tortured by the Jail rulers.

From being a mute witness to the tortures meted out to freedom fighters, the jail has come to be a hallowed place of pilgrimage for all freedom loving patriot souls. The convicts were transported to serve the sentence of "Kaala Pani" or solitary confinement in the once notorious and now of historical importance, the Cellular Jail. Near the compound wall to the right of the main entrance were the gallows, capable of hanging three persons simultaneously with a separate door in the outer compound wall for removing the corpses. The Jail has been converted into a National Memorial by the then Prime Minister, Shri Morarji Desai on 11th February, 1979.

Today the entrance block of the National Memorial houses Freedom Fighters' photos and exhibition gallery in the ground floor. The first floor of the building has an Art Gallery, Netaji Gallery and a Library on Freedom Movement. Gallery on First war of Independence and Old Photographs Gallery have also been set up in the premises of the National Memorial. An eternal flame of Freedom-Swatantra Jyoti has been erected in the premises of the Jail in memory of all the freedom fighters and martyrs.

Architectural Background

Cellular Jail completed in 1906 is entirely made up of individual cells (measuring 13.5 feet x 7 feet with an iron grill door) meant for the solitary confinement of the prisoners. A prisoner had to wobble himself within his own four walls. This massive puce colored building was once a seven-pronged structure with honeycombed corridors and a central rectangle tower serving as its fulcrum. Currently only three of its seven prongs are intact. Spread as seven spokes of a bicycle wheel, this unique three-storied structure was the first of its kind in India. The 663 cells in the jail were specially built for solitary confinement of the prisoners. In the center of the Seven wings of the Cellular Jail, a Central tower in rectangle shape was built. Thus a single guard on duty could supervise all the seven wings from his vantage position.

History in brief

The Cellular Jail was the shadiest prison of the British rule in India. The Indian Mutiny of 1857 forced the Britishers to establish a fresh penal settlement in March 1858 after the failure of the first penal settlement (1789-1796) in the Islands which was administered by a British Superintendent. This designation was converted into Chief Commissioner in 1872. Edward Horace Man, son of Colonel Man raised the Union Jack at Port Blair on 22nd Jan, 1858, when the second settlement was founded.

The initial and original object of establishing a settlement in Andamans was to provide a safe haven for vessels during storms. A regular settlement in the Islands was considered as the only remedy for the security of the vessels plying in the region. The first attempt to colonize these Islands was made in the year 1789 when a colony was established on Chatham Island by Captain Archibald Blair. This settlement was later moved to Port Cornwallis in North Andaman, the idea being that it would eventually become a naval base. This scheme did not, however, materialize, and the colony was closed in the year 1796.

The Stamps

The question of establishing a permanent colony in the Andamans as a place of refuge for the crews of ships wrecked on the coasts was again mooted some sixty years later; but the present Penal Settlement was actually established in the year 1858 for the accommodation of the vast numbers of prisoners resulting from the quelling of the First War of Indian Independence of 1857 in order to isolate them from the mainland India.

The modern history of Andaman and Nicobar Islands begins with the bringing in of 200 mutineers of 1857 on 10th March, 1858 marking the beginning of 2nd penal settlement in the Islands. All life and long-term prisoners, who on some grounds have escaped the death penalty in India and Burma, were selected for transportation to the penal settlement of Andaman Islands.

The first batch of 200 freedom fighters of the First War of Independence landed in the Andaman and Nicobar Islands on 10th March 1858, marking the beginning of the penal settlement. All life and long-term prisoners, from

Career in Agricultural Engineering

Agriculture is the most important sector in the Indian economy which contributes around 23% to the Gross Domestic products and more than 70% of the total work force is employed in this sector. Almost all rural India is dependent on agriculture and allied activities like animal husbandry, dairy, poultry and fisheries.

Being primarily an agricultural country the growth and development of Indian economy particularly depend upon steady growth of agriculture and other allied activities.

The task of an agricultural engineer is to improve agricultural production by means of better engineering methods, inventions, technology and equipment which also require a good intellect and a desire to make a difference to the future of farming. Improvement in agricultural farm machinery, farm structures, rural electrification, bio-gas, new technologies in the design and manufacture of agricultural products and also conservation of soil and water are some of the jobs handled by an agricultural engineer.

Course Details

The basic eligibility criteria for a candidate aspiring to do a BE in Agricultural Engineering is 10+2, with Physics, Chemistry, Mathematics and preferably Biology. To become a qualified Agricultural Engineer one must have a graduate degree (B.E / B.Tech) or at least a diploma in Agricultural Engineering. BE / B.Tech Agriculture courses are of 4 years' duration while the diploma courses are of 2-3 years' duration.

Selection to all Agricultural Engineering courses is on the basis of joint entrance exam (JEE) for the IIT's and separate state level and national level exams for other institutions. After completion of BE/B.Tech one can pursue M.Tech in Agriculture which includes study like crop process engineering, farm machinery and power, soil and water conservation etc. A Ph.D. degree of three years is also offered at IIT kharagpur, and Indian Agricultural Research Institute (IARI), New Delhi.

Health benefit of Colocasia/Taro

Taro or dasheen corms possess more calories than potatoes. 100 grams of root provides 112 calories. Their calorie value chiefly comes from complex carbohydrates, amylose and amylopectin. Nonetheless, the roots are very low in fats and protein than in cereals and pulses. Their protein levels can be comparable to that of other tropical food sources like yam, cassava, potato, plantain, etc. The corms, however, are free from gluten protein. They carry high-quality phyto-nutrition profile comprising of dietary fiber, and antioxidants in addition to moderate proportions of minerals, and vitamins.

Taro is one of the finest sources dietary fibers; 100 g flesh provides 4.1 g or 11% of daily-requirement of dietary fiber. Together with slow digesting complex carbohydrates, moderate amounts of fiber in the food help gradual rise in blood sugar levels.

Yellow-fleshed roots and young, tender leaves have significant levels of phenolic flavonoid pigment antioxidants (Contd. on page 4) ↪....

Cool things to do this summer season!

Summer is knocking on our doors, and so will the hotness of the sun, making us all sweaty and drained out! Eating a cold ice-cream or sleeping on the grass, swimming late night in the pool and many such things can make this summer season more enjoyable.

Thinking what to do this summer? So, here are some cool things that can wash away your summer blues:

such as β-carotenes, and cryptoxanthin along with vitamin A. 100 g fresh taro leaves provide 4825 IU or 161% of RDA of vitamin A. Altogether, these compounds are required for maintaining healthy mucus membranes, skin and vision. Consumption of natural foods rich in flavonoids helps protect from lung and oral cavity cancers. It also contains good levels of some of the valuable B-complex group of vitamins such as pyridoxine (vitamin B-6), folates, riboflavin, pantothenic acid, and thiamin. Further, the corms provide healthy amounts of some of important minerals like zinc, magnesium, copper, iron, and manganese. In addition, the root has very good amounts of potassium. Potassium is an important component of cell and body fluids that help regulate heart rate and blood pressure.

Career Prospects
Agricultural Engineers have bright career prospects. Upon graduating or post-graduating in Agriculture and allied sciences, the options and opportunities of a career are many. State Department of Agriculture recruits Agricultural Engineers as agricultural officers for the development of agriculture in a district. There are also private firms investing money in medicinal crops and plantation crops who generally recruit agricultural engineers. Some agricultural engineers can look towards NGOs working in rural areas. Those interested in research activities can join IARI as junior fellow researcher and become agricultural scientists. Now banks giving advance credit and loans to agriculture and agri-based projects are also employing agriculture experts for evaluation of crops. Teaching agriculture and allied subjects is also an option available to these students. Moreover some down to earth agricultural engineer can also engage them in innovative farming.

eighteen to forty years of age, who on some grounds have escaped the death penalty in India and Burma, were selected for transportation to the penal settlement of Andaman Islands. Though the First War of Independence was quelled, the everlasting flame for achieving freedom could not be put out. Freedom Fighters taking part in the Wahabi Movement, participants of Manipur Revolt, and a large number of Burmese from Tharawadda, who had revolted against British rule, were also transported to the penal settlement in the Andaman.

A two member Commission consisting of. C.J. Lyall, Surgeon of Bengal Civil Service and Major A.S. Lethbridge was constituted in January 1890 with the direction to submit a detailed report on the working of the penal settlement of Port Blair. After their inspection, the Commission submitted their report to the Government on 26th April 1890. The Commission found that the system has contributed immensely towards reformation of transported prisoners. However, they expressed great dissatisfaction over the prevailing conditions in Andamans and reported that the restrictions imposed upon the prisoners in the Andamans were much less severe than those in Indian jails and therefore recommended that the prisoners in the Andamans must pass through a much harder life, at least during the initial stages. They specifically recommended that prisoners should be confined during the first six months in solitary cells in a jail to be specially built for the purpose in order to maintain in it a degree of discipline till then unknown in Port Blair. This was the genesis of the construction of the Cellular Jail, once the symbol of British oppression and today a National Memorial.

The work of jail construction was taken up in the year 1896 on the basis of Order No. 423 dated 30th September, 1896 issued by the then Administration. This order was issued by Col. NMT Horsford, Superintendent of Port Blair. The construction of Cellular Jail was completed in 1906, when Sir Richard Temple was the Chief Commissioner. The earth quake of 1941 and the Japanese invasion followed by occupation of this territory by them caused substantial damage to the Jail building resulting in the demolition of 4 out of its 7 wings. When the islands fell into the hands of Japanese from 23rd March, 1942 to 7th October, 1945, the prisoners and other suspected citizens were thrown under their barbarous inhuman methods. The conditions in the Cellular Jail were far too worse than other jail tortures of that time. Many of them had been shot dead and buried in common graves. The "Humphrey Gunj Martyrs Memorial" 15 kms from Port Blair today stands as a mute witness to the inhuman treatment meted out to the elite of Andaman by the Japanese on mere ground of suspicion. The forms of labour for the political prisoners were actually intended to function as the forms of torture. The political prisoners were required to produce a daily quota of thirty pounds of coconut oil, ten pounds of mustard oil-- targets that were beyond the physical capacity of all. Dire punishment followed for those who failed to meet the quotas. Punishment was barbaric. Torture and flogging were frequently resorted to on the flogging stand. Sack cloth uniforms, unhygienic diet, bar fetters, crossbar fetters, neck ring shackles, leg irons and chains were other deterrents for those who refused to submit to the brutal Warders. The punishment varied from handcuffs for a week and fetters for six months to solitary confinement. In the crowded, filthy, damp environment of the Cellular Jail, facing the brutalities of the Jail officials, and the soul shattering labour, political prisoners continued their struggle with their slogans for freedom. The bleak desolation of prison life, the stifling atmosphere of cells, resounding with the clank of chains, curses and abusive epithets of the warders was enough to unnerve even the hardest of them.

What makes this jail a sacred spot is the fact that some of India's most distinguished freedom fighters and charismatic personalities were incarcerated here. The list includes the Savarkar brothers, Motilal Verma, Babu Ram Hari, Pandit Permanand, Ladha Ram, Ullaskar Dutt, Barin Kumar Ghosh, Bhai Parmanand, Indu Bhushan Roy, Prithvi Singh Azad, Pulin Das, Trailokyanath Chakravarty, Gurumukh Singh, among others. Group of revolutionaries charged in the Alipore Bomb Case, Nasik Conspiracy Case, Lahore Conspiracy Case, Chittagong Armoury Raid Case, Inter-Provincial Conspiracy Case, Gaya Conspiracy Case, Bathua Action and Conspiracy Case, etc. were brought to the Cellular Jail for long terms of rigorous imprisonment. It is the association of these names that makes this Jail a truly National Memorial.

Me & Maths

Me and math have a love and hate relationship.
I hate math but love it When I find the answer to a math problem.
I get excited when I realised that I solved it.
The discouragement I feel, when I get to the next problem and see that this problem is not like the last.
What the hell is this !!
Inhale, exhale.
I think, I research.
Finally, I understand, now I can explain it.
Multiply, divide, add, subtract, and conquer I'm going to beat this math with math. Integers, percentages, I got it.
Love you now, hate u later what's next, so that we can continue this relationship.

Recipe of the week

Coconut Chicken Curry

Ingredients:
1/4 cup whole unsalted cashews, 1 pound skinless, boneless chicken breasts, cut into 1-inch pieces, Salt To Taste, 1/4 cup vegetable oil, 1/4 tsp black mustard seeds, 1/4 tsp cumin seeds, 1/4 tsp ground coriander, 1 tbsp curry powder, 1 medium onion, thinly sliced, 1 tsp finely grated fresh ginger, 1 garlic clove, minced, 1 (14 ounce) can unsweetened coconut milk, 1/4 cup frozen peas, 2 tbsp chopped coriander

How to make chicken with coconut milk:
Preheat the oven to 350 degrees F.
Spread the cashews in a pie plate and bake for 5 minutes, or until fragrant and lightly toasted. Transfer to a plate to cool.
Lightly season the chicken with salt. In a large, deep skillet, heat 3 tablespoons of the oil until smoking.
Add the chicken and cook over moderately high heat until golden brown, about 1 1/2 minutes per side. Transfer the chicken to a plate and reduce the heat to moderate.
Add the remaining 1 tablespoon of oil to the skillet and heat until smoking. Add the mustard seeds and cook for about 1 minute, or until they stop popping. Add the cumin seeds, coriander and curry powder, and cook, stirring occasionally, until fragrant, about 1 minute.
Add the onion, ginger and garlic, and cook until the onion softens, about 10 minutes; if the mixture seems dry, add up to 1/4 cup of water to prevent sticking.
Stir in the coconut milk and bring to a boil. Reduce the heat to low. Return the chicken to the skillet and simmer until cooked through, about 5 minutes. Stir in the peas and cook for 1 minute. Transfer the coconut chicken curry to a bowl, sprinkle with the coriander and cashews and serve.
