Health benefits of Jackfruit

Jackfruit is a tree native to Southeast Asia. The fruit has a spiky green covering with white flesh inside. It is considered to be the largest tree borne fruit. The seeds of the fruit are taken from the ripe fruit and then dried for use in either in curries or as part of roasted snacks. The seeds of jackfruit which are big oval shaped and have a milky taste are often prepared by themselves. The fruit is known for its distinct sweet and fruity aroma. The flesh is starchy and fibrous. Jackfruit seeds taste like chestnuts and may even be preserved in syrup likewise. The roasted seed is also ground to make a flour blend with wheat for baking. It is mostly used in South and South East Asian cuisines. It is eaten cooked. They turn brown and rancid very quickly. They should be refrigerated. Fruity goodness! It contains calories but no cholesterol and saturated fats. It is rich in anti-oxidants and is known to provide instant energy. Even the seeds of this fruit have a lot of benefits. They help prevent constipation, treat nervousness, help prevent obesity and lowers blood pressure. It is also an anti-oxidant. Source: NDTV food

Incredible India! Parrot Island, Baratang

This is a small uninhabited island located near Baratang Jetty. What makes it attractive for tourists is the mystery that this Island holds which calls thousands of parrots every evening. To reach here, one has to take a fiber boat from Baratang Jetty and cross through a creek. It is better to visit in the evenings if you want to see parrots. Each evening, thousands of parrots flock together and roost here. They leave this Island next morning. In the mean time they trim the Island and leave it perfectly pruned. As the sun sets, the quite sea and the silence turns into a roosting ground for many parakeets. The birds that come to Parrot island are called parakeets as they are varied groups. Watch the birds come and roost, and fly inside and outside the Island. You cannot leave from there without wondering 'why only Parrot Island?'
